The Valley of Heart's Delight

A Multiple-media Exhibit

August 23 through October 23

What is now known as the Santa Clara Valley was originally a thriving collection of Ohlone Native American settlements. With the arrival of the Spanish and later settlers, the Valley became known as "The Valley of Heart's Delight" for its thousands of acres of blooming orchards and plants, mild climate and scenic beauty. Until the 1960s, it was the largest fruit production and packing region in the world. Beginning in the middle of the 20th century, the Santa Clara Valley and its surrounding environs have been transformed into "Silicon Valley," the foremost center for technology innovation in the country. This exhibit celebrates the beauty, bounty, creativity, history, and cultural heritage of this special piece of geography and its evolution from its Native American roots to the present through a stunning collection of original paintings, drawings, photography, and three-dimensional art.

Closing Reception

Thursday, October 20, 5:00 pm – 7:00 pm

Join us to celebrate this new exhibit, view the artwork, and meet the artists while enjoying a glass of wine and delicious appetizers. The Garden will be open so visitors can also take an after-hours walk. While admission is free reservations are required. Reservation deadline is October 14.
